Preface

The Oxford American Dictionary of Current English covers an extensive range of contemporary American English vocabulary. The text was specially compiled for this edition by Oxford's U.S. Dictionaries Program, in keeping with the renowned lexicographic tradition of Oxford University Press. Oxford's unrivaled language research, including the North American Reading Program (NARP), constantly monitors growth and change in American English. Using computerized search-and-analysis tools developed originally for the 20-volume Oxford English Dictionary, our American lexicographers can quickly explore more than 45 million words of citation text collected by NARP, and consult many other massive English language databases. The result is a more sharply refined picture of the language of today, elucidating many complex aspects of meaning, grammar, and usage.

This dictionary reflects the scholarly guidance of Oxford's academic advisors, as well as the experience of specialist consultants in many fields of endeavor. And with the Internet and the World Wide Web, Oxford lexicographers are now able to stay in daily contact with expert sources worldwide, receiving answers to their queries almost instantly.

The text is accompanied by hundreds of examples, illustrations, usage notes, and word histories that clarify definitions and provide guidance on the subtleties of appropriate usage. Biographical and geographical sections in the back of the book offer essential information on the key people and places of the world. Finally, special reference appendices provide quick-reference information for a variety of subjects that are of frequent interest.

The Oxford American Dictionary of Current English is an excellent choice for business people, students, and all those who wish to use English with clarity and style. With its attention to accuracy, currency, and thoroughness, this new American dictionary builds on the tradition of Oxford—the world's most trusted name in dictionaries.

How to Use This Dictionary

1 MAIN ENTRIES

Each main entry is printed in bold roman type:

> ad•um•brate /ádumbrayt/ v.tr. 1 indicate faintly. 2 represent in outline. 3 foreshadow; typify. 4 overshadow.

Main entries are arranged in letter-by-letter alphabetical order. Different words that are spelled the same way (homographs) are distinguished by raised numerals:

> font[1] /font/ n. 1 a receptacle in a church for baptismal water. 2 the reservoir for oil in a lamp.
> font[2] /font/ n. Printing a set of type of one face or size.

2 PRONUNCIATION

Guidance on the pronunciation of a main entry will be found in most cases immediately after the main entry, enclosed in oblique strokes / /. In some cases, more than one pronunciation is given: that given first is the more frequent or preferred pronunciation. Guidance on the pronunciation of derivatives of the main entry is limited to cases in which the main entry pronunciation would be of no help in establishing the correct pronunciation of the derivative. The dictionary uses a simple respelling system to represent pronunciation. This is meant to be self-explanatory and easily readable by the lay person without constant recourse to a table of special characters.

For details on the pronunciation symbols, see the "Key to Pronunciation" below.

3 PART OF SPEECH

The grammatical identity of words as noun, verb, adjective, and so on, is given for all main entries and derivatives, and for compounds and phrases when necessary to aid clarity. The same part-of-speech labeling is used for groups of more than one word when the group has the function of a particular part of speech, e.g., ad hoc; vacuum cleaner. When a main entry has more than one part of speech, a list is given at the beginning of the entry, and the treatment of the successive parts of speech is introduced by a bullet in each case:

> ac•ci•den•tal /áksidént'l/ adj. & n. • adj. 1 happening by chance or unexpectedly. 2 not essential to a conception. • n. 1 Mus. a sign indicating a momentary departure from the key signature. 2 something not essential to a conception. □□ ac•ci•den•tal•ly adv.

The standard part-of-speech names are used, and the following additional explanations should be noted:

- Nouns used attributively are designated attrib. when their function does not include predicative use (e.g., model in a model student; but the student is very model is not acceptable usage; see also at "Adjectives", next).
- Adjectives are labeled attrib. (= attributive) when they are normally placed before the word they modify (e.g., acting in acting manager), and predic. (= predicative) when they normally occur (usually after a verb) in the predicate of a sentence (e.g., afraid in he was afraid). When an adjective can occur either attributively or predicatively, the simple designation adj. is used.
- The designation absol. (= absolute) refers to uses of transitive verbs with an object implied but not stated (as in smoking kills and let me explain).
- The designation "in comb." (= in combination), or "also in comb.," refers to uses of words (especially adjectives and nouns) as an element joined by a hyphen to another word, as with crested (which often appears in forms such as red-crested, large-crested) or footer (as in six-footer).

4 VARIANTS

Variant spellings are given before the definition; in all such cases the form given as the main entry is the preferred form. Variant forms are also given at their own places in the dictionary when these are three or more entries away from the main form.

Variant spellings given at the beginning of an entry normally apply to the whole entry, including any phrases and undefined derivatives. When variants apply only to certain functions or senses of a word, these are given in parentheses at the relevant point in the entry.

Variant British spellings are indicated by the designation Brit. These variants are often found in British use in addition to or instead of the main forms given.

Pronunciation of variants is given when it differs significantly from the pronunciation of the main entry.

5 INFLECTED FORMS

Inflected forms of words (i.e., plural, past tenses, etc.) are given after the part of speech concerned:

> broad•cast /bráwdkast/ v., n., adj., & adv. • v. (past broadcast or broadcasted; past part. broadcast) 1 tr. a transmit by radio or television. b disseminate (information) widely. 2 intr. undertake or take part in a radio or television transmission. 3 tr. scatter (seed, etc.) over a large area. • n. a radio or television program or transmission. • adj. 1 transmitted by radio or television. 2 widely disseminated. • adv. over a large area. □□ broad•cast•er n. broad•cast•ing n.

The forms given are normally those in use in American English. Pronunciation of inflected forms is given when it differs significantly from the pronunciation of the main entry. The designation "pronunc. same" denotes that the pronunciation, despite a change of form, is the same as that of the main entry. In general, the inflection of nouns, verbs, adjectives, and adverbs is given when it is irregular (as described further below) or when, though regular, it causes difficulty (as with forms such as budgeted, coos, and taxis).

Plurals of nouns

Nouns that form their plural regularly by adding -s (or -es when they end in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch) receive no comment. Other plural forms are given, notably in cases where the singular is a noun that:

- ends in -i or -o.
- ends in -y.
- is a Latinate form ending in -a or -um, etc.
- has more than one plural form, e.g., fish and aquarium.
- has a plural involving a change in the stem, e.g., foot, feet.
- has a plural form identical to the singular form, e.g., sheep.
- ends in -ful, e.g., handful.

Forms of verbs

The following verb forms are regarded as regular:

- third person singular present tense forms adding -s to the stem, or -es to stems ending in -s, -x, -z, -sh, or soft -ch (e.g., bite/bites; pass/passes)
- past tenses and past participles adding -ed to the stem, dropping a final silent -e (e.g., changed; danced).
- present participles adding -ing to the stem, dropping a final silent -e (e.g., changing; dancing).

Other forms are given, notably those that involve:

- doubling of a final consonant, e.g., bat, batted, batting.
- strong and irregular forms involving a change in the stem, e.g., come, came, come, and go, went, gone.
- irregular inflections of borrowed words, e.g., polka'd.

Comparative and superlative of adjectives and adverbs

Words of one syllable adding -er or -est and those ending in silent -e dropping the -e (e.g., braver, bravest) are regarded as regular. Most one-syllable words have these forms, but participial adjectives (e.g., pleased) do not. Those that double a final consonant (e.g., hot, hotter, hottest) are given, as are two-syllable words that have comparative and superlative forms in -er and -est (of which very many are forms ending in -y, e.g., lucky, luckier, luckiest), and their negative forms (e.g., unluckier, unluckiest). It should be noted that specification of these forms indicates only that they are available; it is usually also possible to form comparatives with more and superlatives with most (as in more lucky, most unlucky), which is the standard way of proceeding with adjectives and adverbs that are not regularly inflected.

Adjectives in -able formed from transitive verbs

These are given as derivatives when there is sufficient evidence of their currency; in general they are formed as follows:

- verbs drop silent final -e except after c and g (e.g., movable but changeable).
- verbs of more than one syllable ending in -y (preceded by a consonant or qu) change y to i (e.g., enviable, undeniable).
- a final consonant is often doubled as in normal inflection (e.g., conferrable, regrettable).

6 DEFINITION

Definitions are listed in a numbered sequence in order of relative familiarity and importance, with the most current and important senses given first. They are subdivided into lettered senses (a, b, etc.) when these are closely related or call for collective treatment.

7 GRAMMAR NOTES

Definitions are often accompanied by explanations in parentheses of how the word or phrase in question is used in context. Often, the comment refers to words that usually follow ("foll. by") or precede ("prec. by") the word being explained:

> ac•cred•it /əkrédit/ v.tr. (accredited, accrediting) 1 (foll. by to) attribute (a saying, etc.) to (a person). 2 (foll. by with) credit (a person) with (a saying, etc.). 3 (usu. foll. by to or at) send (an ambassador, etc.) with credentials. □□ ac•cred•i•ta•tion /–táyshən/ n.

The formula "foll. by to + infin." means that the word is followed by a normal infinitive with to, as after want in wanted to leave and after ready in ready to burst. The formula "foll. by that + clause" indicates the routine addition of a clause with that, as after say in said that it was late or after warn in warned him that he was late too often. The formulas "pres. part." and "verbal noun" denote verbal forms in -ing that function as adjectives and nouns respectively, as in set him laughing and tired of asking.

8 ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLES

Examples of words in use are given to support or clarify the definitions. These appear in italics following the definition, enclosed in parentheses. They are meant to amplify meaning and (especially when following a grammatical point) illustrate how the word is used in context.

9 USAGE AND LABELS

If the use of a word is restricted in any way, this is indicated by one of several labels printed in italics, as explained in the following.

Geographical labels

US indicates that the use is found chiefly in American English (often including Canada), but not in British English except as a conscious Americanism.

Brit. indicates that the use is found chiefly in British English (and often also in Australian and New Zealand English, and in other parts of the British Commonwealth), but not typically in American English.

Other geographical labels (e.g., Austral., NZ, S. Afr.) indicate that usage is largely restricted to the areas designated.

These usage labels should be distinguished from comments of the type "(in the UK)" preceding definitions, which denote that the thing defined is associated with the country named. For example, Parliament is a British institution, but the term is not restricted to British English.

Register labels

Levels of usage, or registers, are indicated as follows:

- formal indicates uses that are normally restricted to formal (esp. written) English, e.g., commence.
- colloq. (= colloquial) indicates a use that is normally restricted to informal (esp. spoken) English.
- sl. (= slang) indicates an informal use (typically a word that is equivalent in meaning to a "standard" word), unsuited to written English and often restricted to a particular social group, while coarse sl. is used to show that an expression is regarded as vulgar or unacceptable even in spoken use in most social contexts.
- archaic indicates a word that is obsolete in general use and is restricted to special contexts such as legal or religious use, or is used for special effect.
- literary indicates a word or use that is found chiefly in literature.
- poet. (= poetic) indicates uses confined to poetry or other similar contexts.
- joc. (= jocular) indicates uses that are intended to be humorous or playful.
- derog. (= derogatory) denotes uses that are intentionally disparaging.
- offens. (= offensive) denotes uses that cause offense, whether intentionally or not.
- disp. (= disputed) indicates a use that is disputed or controversial. When further explanation is needed a usage note (see below) is given as well or instead.
- hist. (= historical) denotes a word or use that is confined to historical reference, normally because the thing referred to no longer exists.
- propr. (= proprietary) denotes a term that is asserted to have the status of a trademark (see the Note on Proprietary Status, below).

Subject labels

Subject labels, e.g., Law, Math., Naut., show that a word or sense is used in a particular field of activity, and is not in widespread general use.

Usage notes

These give extra information not central to the definition, and to explain points of grammar and style. They are introduced by the symbol ▶. The purpose of these notes is not to prescribe usage but to alert the user to a difficulty or controversy attached to particular uses.

10 PHRASES AND IDIOMS

These are listed (together with compounds) in alphabetical order after the treatment of the main senses and introduced by the symbol □ . The words a, the, one, and person do not count for purposes of alphabetical order. They are normally defined under the first key word in the phrase, except when a later word is more clearly the key word or is the common word in a phrase with variants.

11 DERIVATIVES

Words formed by adding a standard suffix to another word are in many cases listed at the end of the entry for the main word, introduced by the symbol □□ . These are not defined since they can be understood from the sense of the main entry plus that of the suffix concerned. When further definition is called for they are given main entries in their own right (e.g., changeable).

12 PREFIXES, SUFFIXES, AND COMBINING FORMS

A large selection of these is given in the main body of the text; prefixes are given in the form ex-, re-, etc., and suffixes in the form -ion, -ness, etc. These entries should be consulted to explain the many routinely formed derivatives given at the end of entries (see 11 above). Combining forms (e.g., bio-, -graphy) are semantically significant elements that can be attached to words or elements as explained in the usage note at the entry for combining form.

13 WORD HISTORIES

Brief paragraphs explaining the origin of a word are given as boxed features accompanying certain entries in the dictionary. Generally speaking, these word histories tell a particularly interesting story about how a word originated or developed, and are often helpful in understanding and remembering the meaning.

14 CROSS REFERENCES

Cross references appear in small capitals if the reference is to a main entry and in italics if the reference is to a compound, idiom, or phrase within an entry. References in italics to compounds and defined phrases and idioms are to the entry for the first word, unless another word is specified.

Y	as in	aperçu /aapersY/
zh	as in	measure /mézhər/, vision /vizhən/

More than one acceptable pronunciation may be given, with commas between the variants; for example:

news /no͞oz, nyo͞oz/

If the pronunciations of a word differ only in part, then the syllable or syllables affected are shown as follows:

bedroom /bédro͞om, –ro͞om/, forest /fáwrist, fór–/

The same principle applies to derivative forms that are given within the main entry; for example:

complete /kəmpléet/, completion /–pléeshən/

STRESS

The mark that appears over the vowel symbol in words of more than one syllable indicates the part of the word that carries the stress. Where a word has two or more stress markers then the main stress may vary according to the context in which a word is used; for example:

afternoon /áftərno͡on/

In the phrase "afternoon tea" the main stress falls on the first syllable /áftər–/, but in the phrase "all afternoon" the main stress falls on the last syllable /–no͡on/.

A

city Middle English: from Old French cite, from Latin civitas, from civis 'citizen.' Originally denoting a town, and often used as a Latin equivalent to Old English burh 'borough,' the term was later applied to foreign and ancient cities and to the more important English boroughs. The connection between city and cathedral grew up under the Norman kings, as the episcopal sees (many of which had been established in villages) were removed to the chief borough of the diocese.
